

I believe that Viacom/CBS/NFL were in violation of obscenity laws as it related to the February 1, 2004, Super Bowl broadcast on CBS. The lyrics of two songs (and the dancing/stripping) performed at halftime were inappropriate for children. Obviously, Janet Jackson's breast being exposed was completely inappropriate -- I find it very hard to believe that it was an accident. There should have been a warning at the beginning of the broadcast that it was inappropriate viewing for children. Had I any idea of the nature of the programming, including the advertisements (which were sexual and violent in content and were about alcohol and erectile dysfunction, I would not have allowed my eight year old daughter to watch. Viacom/CBS/NFL (as I'm sure the FCC is aware of, Viacom owns CBS and MTV (who produced the halftime show) and CBS is a partner in NFL Partners, L.L.C.) should be levied with a large fine. The only way to prevent this type of programming is to hit their wallets.
